

THE LADY HANDLER

By MRS. BOOBLES

Written especially for the DOG NEWS

*"I didn't mean the fellow any harm—" Of course she did not—but it worked that way
Read about the German's mistake and the dire consequences*

Dear Editor:

"AND when the judge says, 'Gate him,' you take your dog out—beat it for the gate—vamoose—you're done!" I added in a jocular vein, as I finished explaining to a little German fellow how to show his Shepherd in the ring. Of course I told him that when the judge said, "Bring him to the block," to bring him up to the middle; and when he said, "Run him," to trot him up and down after he had walked him for a few minutes. I had never seen his dog, so I didn't know that he had a good one. Few of these amateurs do, but I was certainly wrong in this case.

I didn't mean to do the little fellow any harm. I always have a penchant for bowlegged men—they're so cute—just to look at. But Hans (that was his name,) was the most serious fellow imaginable. When he asked me to give him a few tips he backed off and saluted like a corporal in the Kaiser's own regiment, and when he had finished he saluted me again like I was the Empress.

Later in the day we all got in the ring together. The judge on this particular occasion was one of those high strung, nervous fellows, abrupt in speech and action, and lacking somewhat the courtesy of the average ermine bearer.

We trotted around the ring. My dog wasn't so good, but I had him trained to the Queen's taste. He had a lovely coat. His eyes were light, but his conformation was excellent and his gait was the best ever. We showed on the block—Hans next to me. Finally the judge lined them up with me second and Hans in the lead. It looked like I was getting ready for a red ribbon, of which Sister Boobles don't like many! Then he started to gait them. Finally my turn came. Up and down I walked. Up and down I ran. You know—in my usual graceful way.

Bodo—my Politzehund—traveled like a well oiled machine. I thought an open bottle of L'Origan could have taken a nice ride on his back without spilling a drop. And I was right too. He was level as a banker's head, even when at full speed. Finally I stopped at the edge of the ring.

I saw the judge motion Hans up to him. "That's unusual," I thought, but I figured out afterwards that he called him up because he thought he was a little deaf!

"Gait him," I heard the judge say.

Then Hans got pale. He backed off a few feet, pulling his dog along. His heels clicked. His right hand came up. He saluted. Then he turned tail and with almost a goose step walked from the ring, dragging his dog behind him! Out he went, down the aisle, with everybody gazing after him in astonishment. The judge didn't get it at all. Neither did anybody else—but me. I got it. And I never said one word—not I! They put me at the top of the line and in a few minutes I walked up for the blue.

The incident was soon forgotten by everyone but me. I trailed back to my little German friend to find out what it was all about.

"What was the matter, Hans?" I asked. "Why did you take your dog out of the ring so suddenly?"

"Vell—the judge—he say 'Gate him,'—and you told me that meant—vamoose—so I did."

"Too bad, too bad," I replied, struggling with my laughter. "Don't tell anybody. Let them think your dog wassick and then they'll never know why you lost."

"I'll do that, Boobles," he said. "T'ank you so much." And then he saluted.

Scottish Terriers

Little, wiggly balls of black—bluish-black, mayhaps. Unkempt, frolicksome, perhaps a bit timid with strangers, but a jolly, jolly little dog. At the dog shows, quite different. Here the Scottie is a dignified representative of his pure-bred ancestors. Tail up, glistening eyes, feet twinkling—he struts about the ring, a lowly monarch of all he serves. He takes naturally to rats and woodchucks, and his long, punishing jaws enable him to cope with them most successfully. In the show ring he is a hero; to some, the ribald, he is a caricature, but his dignity never fails. A Scottie always thinks well of himself.

Michaelmas Meg, young Scottish Terrier, descendant of the famous Ch. Bapton Norman, owned by Mrs. A. M. Henshaw, Cincinnati, Ohio.

COLEBROOKE FOX TERRIERS

The Kennels at Colebrooke

Foxterrier fanciers have been watching with much interest the career of Colebrooke Dunlucie at the Southern and Mid-western shows in the capable hands of Dick Davis, of Fort Thomas. While in the East, the greater part of the competition is between imported dogs, brought over from England at great expense after having made their reputations on the other side, the South and West regard the home-bred dog not only more interesting, but also better for the breed in the long run.

Colebrooke Dunlucie, or "Lucy" as she is affectionately called at home, is a home-bred product of Colebrooke Kennels at St. Matthews, just out of Louisville, Ky. Lucy has a real wire coat, long head and dark eye. There is probably no terrier out today that can surpass her in front. She is full of fire, and elegantly proportioned all over. At the time of writing she seems well on her way to her championship. Lucy weaned a topping litter by International Champion Aman Foxtrot in December. Two of the puppies, Colebrooke Fastidious Susan and Colebrooke Snuffin' Pete, are shown at the age of three months on another page. Both have wonderful coats, heads and bone. Look at Pete's front in the picture!

Another interesting event at Colebrooke is the expected litter to result from the mating of Colebrooke Darroch, the kennel's hard-coated, cobby, fiery little stud, and Trebor Coloratura Soprano, a young bitch with a marvelous head, by Ch. Well-wire Street Singer, and Colebrooke Jeanne D'Arc, by Top Sergeant. Lass, a keen imported matron who is a half-sister to Barrington Bridegroom, being herself by Barrington Fearnought. Lass is a splendidly proportioned bitch, her hindquarters being particularly notable. She has the famous Wyche coat.

Colebrooke Darroch has been visited by many extra-good bitches this spring, and his puppies are fully justifying his remarkable promise as a sire of dogs with real wire coats, and of the correct size.

Other promising individuals at Colebrooke which are being groomed for the summer shows are Colebrooke
