

Scottish Terriers

A LETTER from the Southwest, brings the information that Tucson will hold its annual show on March 12 and 13, with Dr. Henry Jarrett as judge, and that Tucson will be the first show in a six-show circuit that will end at Denver. The letter also reveals the belated information that the Fred Finney's have a son who is now some three or four months old.

Mr. Finney gives the details of the attainment of the CD title by Black Scott of Harken, the first Scotty to earn an obedience test title. The dog is owned by Miss Aileen Kendall, of Oakland, California, who trained and who has handled him throughout his trials. He was entered in trials on four occasions and won a qualifying score in two: at Del Monte, on July 24, with a score of 90 x 100; and at Sacramento, on October 24, with a score of 91 x 100. Black Scott is by Ch. Heather Goldfinder ex Shadow of Harken; she by Ch. Rosehall Roamer ex Ch. Poble of Harken.

I do not wish to detract from Miss Kendall's accomplishment—some would call it a miracle—in any way, nor do I wish to throw cold water on similar attempts, but I cannot restrain a twinge of regret at the march of progress. I have always felt that a Scotty's most endearing characteristic, and its most distinctive and irritating trait, was its ability to seemingly base its conduct on its own wishes and its conception of its own good, so that a really good Scotty would do what it wanted to do when it got good and ready to do it, and would gradually bend an entire household to its rule. Now we have a Scotty winning a title for obedience—tush tush, and what is the breed coming to?

Just the same, I don't know how old Blackie is now, but there is still a good chance that by the time he is four years old, Miss Kendall will be obeying Blackie just a little bit more than Blackie will be obeying Miss Kendall. If he hasn't become the boss by that time, then he isn't a true Scotty.

Since this month has started with an assortment of information, it may as well continue as a clearing house for miscellaneous discussion. For some time past, I have had the idea of going into the effects of climate and soil on the growth of coats, since various reports indicate that conditions vary greatly within comparatively short distances, and I might as well dispose of the idea in this issue.

In this particular district, within a radius of 30 miles of New York, there has been proof that soil does have some effect on coat, for the coastal kennels—Marlu at Long Branch; Clover Hill at Holmdel; and Monagh Lea at Red Bank—have consistently produced good coats, and D. B. McKey, who is my most travelled informant, attributed those coats to coastal air and sandy soil. Here, 40 miles from those kennels, the climate is not so damp and the soil, which contains some clay and lies on a shale base, is not so harmless in its effects on coats and furnishings.

The McKeys', when they kept their kennel at Keyport, not far from Red Bank, kept their dogs on sand, into which the dogs could dig for two feet or so without striking soil that would form mud. The sand did not promote the presence of fleas, it did not parch coats, and the dogs kept clean and grew excellent coats with very little attention. Here, on soil that contains clay, it is not easy to retain furnishings, and coats require definite attention.

Mr. McKey has reported that Atlanta, and the South in general, grows thin coats and grows them quickly; and a few years ago, while doing radio work on the carrier, Saratoga, and other units of the fleet, Mr. McKey decided that Southern California, even on the coast, did not grow good coats, but that the Peninsula, up at San Francisco, provided plenty of the foggy, chilly nights that ought to grow excellent coats. Mrs. Francis Taylor has reported that the Puget Sound country has the same characteristics as the Peninsula, and that it does grow good coats.

This variation in climate and soil as affecting coat does not mean that good coats can be grown only in certain sections and under certain conditions, but it does mean that certain sections can produce a greater number of good-coated specimens with much less trouble than other sections.

That is a factor which fanciers might bear in mind, and those fanciers who must grow coats under climatic disadvantages should be the first to emphasize coat in their selections for breeding. That point serves to accentuate the regrettable neglect of coat as a consideration in breeding and showing during the last seven or eight years.

The second miscellaneous subject due for discussion is that of photography, for that subject is always brought to mind by the appearance of the various Christmas numbers. The Christmas supplement to Our Dogs (English) was a disappointing one this year, for it was lacking in good terriers or good terrier photographs. Its gun dog photographs maintained an enviable standard, and it is unfortunate that the presentation of the terriers should have been so much less worthy of commendation. It is the Christmas number of the GAZETTE which offers the greatest hope in the photographing of dogs, for the color photographs by Powers offer a fool-proof, although a difficult and expensive, medium for the photographic portraiture of dogs.

In our own breed, the chief drawback of most photographs has been due somewhat to the breed itself, for its dark color and its blocky build require a greater exposure than would be necessary were the color otherwise. Therefore, it has always been necessary to use a wide lens opening, both because of the exposure for the dark color and because of the speed needed to stop movement, and that has cut down the depth of focus.

As a further difficulty, the photographer has always had to get quite close to the dog in order to obtain an image of sufficient size on the negative, and that again has reduced the depth of focus, and has added to the risk of distortion.

That is why the production of a good portrait has always been so much of a professional job, and that is also why most professional photographers of dogs use Graflex cameras, which enable them to follow every movement of the dog, and keep it exactly in focus until the instant that the shutter is released.

However, the prevalence of soft-focus portraits in contemporary Scotty photography is only partially explained by the difficulties of the subject, which requires an even lighting that is not too strong, and by the difficulties of keeping a moving subject within a narrow depth of focus.

The factor of most importance is that a soft-focus portrait covers a great many weaknesses, and that it can be retouched with ease, whereas a sharp, clear portrait can be retouched only slightly, and then with difficulty.

The great virtues of color photography are that it reproduces character and build much more accurately than black-and-white photography, and, greatest virtue of all, it cannot be retouched.

Furthermore, its use on Scotties will do away with the device which is responsible for the upright tail, which is deemed essential today, for the fishline which has ordinarily been used to hold the tail erect cannot be removed from a color plate and therefore it cannot be used when the picture is taken.

When fanciers become accustomed to looking at the tails of the great when they are in more natural positions, then we may be relieved of the present duty of ruining the knees of our trousers in order to hold every dog in the ring so that it looks like a picture.

From the standpoint of the amateur, color photography can be practiced quite easily by the use of Dufay process film, which can be bought to fit almost any camera, or by the use of Kodachrome, which is at present available only in the 35 MM size for Leica, Contax, and similar cameras. These films require accurate exposure, and they have a slight disadvantage in that prints or enlargements have to be specially made and are rather expensive.

However, the films are positive, and each frame or negative can be mounted between slides, masked, and projected as a lantern slide.

Projection has the advantage of enabling the fancier to increase the projected image to life-size or larger if he so desires, and that is a valuable aid in the appraisal of a dog.

From the standpoint of the results obtained, the use of color merely intensifies the qualities which are necessary in the dog and in the photographer. The dog cannot be faked, and therefore it must be good in itself if it is to produce a good image, and the photographer, since he cannot fake, must give full attention to his focusing, to the avoidance of distortion, to the selection of the dog's strong points and the angle which will best portray them, to background, to lighting, and to the catching of that moment when the dog is alert, with its expression at its best, and with no slackness in any line.

That is a formidable list of things to consider, but if the photographer has sufficient feeling for line and character to accentuate the proper lines and to select the best pose for character, and if he has ability and patience, he should be able to produce a portrait of singular beauty and honesty.

Japanese Spaniels

NO show has more visitors than Westminster. Sitting beside one's pets, there are so many questions asked in the three days that in the end, one's mind becomes blank and one's mentality hazy. There are many people who are just curious; but the majority who question are sincere and mean well. This brings to my mind an incident worth relating. Some years ago, at Westminster, a nice old couple approached me. The gentleman's opening remark was: "Have you a business card?"

When assuring him I had none, since I was not a dealer, the conversation started. All questions asked were, I believe, civilly answered. Finally the lady spoke up:

"Do you ever breed them black and tan?"

"Madam," I remarked, "I believe you think these dogs are English toys."

"Why, of course," she replied. "They ought to be for they look like them."

To the average eye the English toy spaniel is the closest relation to Japanese spaniels. I have always felt that is the correct analysis. Yet the Chin dog is different in every respect from any of his contemporaries. He is also different in his ailments. The longer we live, the truer the fact becomes.

In one way, our Japanese spaniels differ. We are not obliged to worry about placing the offspring. The supply seldom fills the demand. Watch the coming 1938 shows, and if luck remains with our breeders the Chins will outnumber many of the other toy breeds at many of our shows. They crept up during 1937, and the outlook is rosy enough to anticipate a great improvement in number and quality this year.

Importations from Japan and others coming from the coast, should augment our Eastern fold with the right kind.—MRS. E. H. BERENDSOHN, 204 Berkeley Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Cocker Spaniels

ON Christmas Eve, the cocker spaniel lost one of his warmest friends. Harold B. Johnson of Westbury, L. I., owner of the famous Midbrook Kennels, died suddenly, following an emergency operation at the South Shore Communities Hospital, Rockville Centre, L. I. Few of us knew that Johnny was ill and close to death; few of us had a chance to say goodbye to the genial figure we all loved so well. In fact, there are many cocker people across the broad land to whom this writing will be sad and shocking news.

Johnny will be remembered long, wherever people gather to talk of the cocker spaniel and of the people who loved the cocker spaniel. His personality had a lasting quality that I think will survive even death. It is hard to write about Johnny without slopping over. Whenever he joined a group at a dog show or looking over some especially prized specimen in a kennel or at a club meeting discussing plans for some future show or field trial, he brought to the discussion a liveliness, a zest, some little extra spark that will be sadly missing from now on.

Enthusiasm marked everything that Johnny did. He would show you a litter of puppies, beam with pride, and predict great futures for the individuals. If a visitor showed the slightest interest in field work, Johnny would trot out one of his shooting dogs, and put him through his paces beneath the apple trees that dotted the spacious lawns in front of the Midbrook Kennels. Be it show dogs the visitor was interested in, Johnny would pose dog after dog on the block, in the trophy filled kennel office, and discuss the faults, merits, and careers of each.

It was on a visit to the Midbrook Kennels that I first met Harold Johnson. I wanted to see F. T. Ch. Blue Waters Magnificent, the first cocker ever to attain title, and I believe, at that time, the dog to hold the title. Johnny called "Larry" out of the run. Larry, a splendid, cheerful, black cocker, came bounding toward his master, carrying a huge stone in his mouth.

"He has to carry something or he's happy," said Johnny, taking the stone which Larry had delivered perfectly. Then he put Larry through a workout on the lawns, retrieving a dummy at command, quarrying his ground, obeying hand signals, dropping to command, dropping to shot. To my mind you, was Harold Johnson showing off his dog to a perfect stranger, simply because the stranger, a novice in the breed, had broken into the Johnson time to express an interest in the shooting spaniel.

After the demonstration, Johnny picked Larry up on the block, and went over the physical characteristics for my benefit. He asked a lot of dumb questions, and Johnny answered them with patience and tact. He encouraged me in my ambition to breed exhibit cockers, giving me much sound advice.

I spent many Sunday mornings after breakfast visit leaning over the fence staring into the Midbrook Kennel yards and talking cocker with the master of the kennels, and always I felt Johnny's friendly warmth and essential kindness and integrity. And I know my experience with him was not unique. He was always ready to spend his hours making friends for the breed he loved. The fact that he made so many friends for himself was incidental.

There is lots more that could be written about Harold Johnson, but it all boils down to the same thing: He was a great guy and we'll all miss him.—WILLIAM HOSIE, Patterdale Kennels, Newbridge Road, Bellmore, L. I.

Old English Sheepdogs

THE Club takes great pleasure in welcoming a new member, George G. D. Klinghuyzen, Jr., who has imported, recently, a new dog from England. I hope the trials for Westminster will include this newcomer. I hear that Mr. Lewis Roesler has recently imported H. H. Merwood Hobbledale from England, and, also that Mrs. Roesler has been invited to judge our breed at the Richmond Dog show in England next summer.

Competition ought to be keen and most interesting, this year, at the Garden. There are a number of new dogs, English, Canadian, and American-bred, and from what I hear, we have a large entry.

For the best interests of the breed the Board of Governors have voted to abandon the idea of holding a specialty show in 1938. A notice to that effect, with explanation

Associated Clubs Have Splendid List of Experts to Pass on Ten Breeds in Annual Exhibition

THE Eighteenth Annual Show of the Associated Terrier Clubs will be held at The Port of New York Authority Building, Fifteenth Street and Eighth Avenue, on Wednesday, February 9. There will be ten clubs participating, consisting of the Airedale Terrier Club, Bedlington Terrier Club, Bullterrier Club, Cairn Terrier Club, Fox-terrier Clubs (smooth and wire), Irish Terrier Club, Sealyham Terrier Club, Scottish Terrier Club, Welsh Terrier Club, and West Highland White Terrier Club. This is the first time that the Bedlington Terrier Club has joined with the Associated Terrier Clubs, and in addition to bringing the number of participating clubs up to ten, it adds one of the most attractive of all the terrier breeds to the exhibition.

In the absence of O. Carley Harriman, who was originally scheduled to judge this breed, but is unable to come from the West Coast at this time, the Airedales will be judged by Charles A. Gardiner. Mrs. Herbert Neal, the former Mrs. Hugh Greeff, will pass on the Bedlingtons, which assures this breed of competent and careful judging. Wm. Prescott Wolcott will judge the cairns. Mr. Wolcott is an expert on terriers, and one of the cairn terrier's foremost amateur judges. The bull terriers will be judged by Enno Meyer, who is not only an all-breed judge, but an authority on bull terriers. He is taking the place of W. Fred Ford, who was originally scheduled to do them.

In fox terriers, the wire judging will be handled by Irving C. Ackerman, who needs no introduction to fox terrier enthusiasts; while the smooth assignment will be adjudicated by Frank Beer, the Canadian expert. Irish terriers will be passed on by Major Edward B. McKinley, and his placing will be looked forward to with a great deal of interest.

The Sealyhams are fortunate in having so able an arbiter as Sylvan Froelich to hand out the ribbons. There is no one more competent to handle this assignment. The Scot-ties will have an old timer to judge them—Bert Hankinson, the dean of them all, who knows more about this breed than all the rest of them put together, and who has bred and shown champions galore. This will be a rare treat for Scottie lovers.

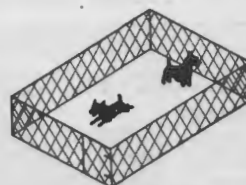

Lewis G. Spence will judge the Welsh in his usual capable fashion. He is an all-breed judge, but an expert on terriers. This seems to be a very happy selection. Edward Danks will judge the West Highland white terriers. Mr. Danks' knowledge of the Highland breed is unsurpassed and his judging is careful and conscientious.

The arrangement the Associated Terrier Clubs have made with the Foffe Restaurant to serve a hot lunch at the show is a distinct step forward and will add to the comfort and convenience of the exhibitors and spectators. Foffe is noted for the excellence of its

NEW TROPHY GIVEN

*Western Setter Club Receives Prize for Member Who Benched Most Winners
During Past Year*

JACK COOPER of Franklin Park, Illinois, was re-elected President of the Western Setter Club at its annual meeting on January 14. Other officers elected for 1938 were: Secretary, Henry Heine, Arlington Heights; treasurer, D. L. Hollenbeck, Chicago; first vice president, J. H. Morse, Desplaines; 2nd vice president, Richard Boonstra, Plainfield; Sergeant-at-arms, Mrs.
W. M. Hanson, St. Charles. J. G. Law of Geneva, was elected chairman of the bench show committee, and Mrs. J. G. Law, chairman of the trophy committee.

The Club decided not to have a vacation during the summer of 1938, and meetings are scheduled for the first Friday of every month throughout the year. Special meetings will be held before the important Chicago shows.
An enlarged program of activities for members during 1938 was promised by Dick Boonstra, new chairman of the entertainment committee.

A handsome silver trophy, to be known as the Midoaks Kennels Trophy was presented to the Club by Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Law. This is to be awarded to the member who benched the most winners, male or female English setters, during 1937. Club members are to report all wins immediately so that the cup can be awarded at the next regular meeting, February 4.—J. H. MORSE, vice president.

OFFICERS ELECTED

*Ingham County Kennel Club Holds Annual Meeting, Picking Arthur E. Hurd
As Its Leader*

THE Ingham County Kennel Club held its annual meeting at the South Lansing, Michigan, Community Hall, Tuesday evening, January 11. About 60 members gathered for a Bohemian dinner, and were pleased to have as guests: Mr. and Mrs. Du Park, and Mr. and Mrs. Merton. Mr. Du Park is president and Mr. Merton is secretary of the Jackson (Michigan) Kennel Club. The visitors reported that their puppy match is to be held Friday evening, February 27.

After dinner the following officers and board members were elected for the ensuing but increase in force. During the preliminary labor they may be irregularly intermittent.

As the foetus (unborn puppy) is forced into the mouth of the womb, the circular bands of muscle are relaxed and stretched to allow a free passage. The foetus passes through the mouth of the womb and enters the vagina which lies wholly within the pelvis.

Further pains cause the ligaments holding the pelvic girdle to the spine to become relaxed. Cartilaginous joints between the bones of the pelvis also allow the canal to become greater in diameter. This is true especially in young animals.

In older bitches, the ligaments and cartilaginous joints become calcified. In such cases, the pelvic girdle does not yield. The result is that a large foetus cannot be forced through. It is a frequent cause of death to the puppies and the mother. It is a form of maternal dystocia.

If a bitch is bred at frequent intervals ankylosis of the pelvic girdle is prevented. It is common, however, in bitches bred for the first time late in life, and in bitches which have had a litter and then been allowed to rest too long before the mating has been repeated.

The skin between the anus and the vulva is known as the perineum. As the foetus is forced through the vagina it causes the perineum to bulge. When this is seen it is a sign that the act of parturition is approaching completion. The labor pains now reach their greatest force. The vulva is relaxed and stretched to allow egress. Between the labia of the vulva there appears a dark bubble like membranous sac filled with fluid. This should not be broken. The regular contractions quickly expel the foetus. As it comes away from the mother, the sac may rupture to allow the puppy to be exposed. In some cases the puppy is born in an intact membrane. Usually there is a cord-like union between the sac and the fleshy placenta which is not expelled immediately.

I advise the attendant to break the membrane and liberate the puppy at this stage. Then seize the cord-like attachment with a towel and apply gentle traction in such a manner that the force is directed away from the bitch and with a slight turn of the mother.

The puppy should be dried with vigorous strokes of a towel. The umbilical cord attaching the afterbirth to the puppy may be severed now. A ligature of silk may be tied around the cord about a quarter of an inch from the puppy's abdomen. The cord is severed on the side of the ligature away from the puppy. If the cord is severed during birth, there is little or no danger of a serious haemorrhage.

A swab of peroxide of hydrogen may be applied briefly or the cord may be held for a minute or so in the jaws of artery forceps. Usually I use artery forceps and scissors instead of the ligature. Ligature of the umbilical cord is apt to cause the bitch to lick the umbilicus too vigorously. This may lead to severe injury or death of the puppy.

HOUSE-BREAKING, BREEDING— SCOTTISH TERRIER

QUESTION:—I would appreciate any help or advice you could give me regarding the house-breaking of a Scottish terrier about 17 months old. We were told when we obtained her that she was not house-broken, and had been in the kennels her entire life. We have since tried all possible means that we know, not very many however, as we have never had a dog previously and know very little concerning them or their habits. Will you also please advise the proper time for breeding Scottish terriers. Seven, fourteen or just how many days after the dog comes in heat. Also, how can we figure the exact time when she will again come in heat. Our backyard has been nothing short of a dog pound for the past two weeks, and we would like to take steps to prevent the same occurrence happening hereafter, although, frankly, I do not know what steps to take.—S. R. W., Jr., Mitchell, S. Dak.

ANSWER:—It is not always easy to house-break an adult dog of any breed when slovenly habits have been allowed to persist as in the case under discussion. I suggest that you keep the bitch in a small cage, and allow her to go in the yard only at certain times of the day which must be on a fixed daily schedule. The important times for exercise are first thing in the morning, immediately after meals, and at bed time. At least four periods of exercise must be given each day. Another method is to follow the same schedule, but keep the bitch tied on a small bed. You will find the information on breeding in the January and current issues of the AMERICAN KENNEL GAZETTE.

CHOREA?

QUESTION:—I would greatly appreciate any help you can give me in the following case: A seemingly healthy, sturdy, five months old puppy suddenly ment. Suggested possibility of "outgrowing" the trouble but did not prescribe any "hopeful" treatment. Said to keep him quiet and warm, and give Fowler's solution, starting with two drops twice a day for three days and working up to 21 drops twice daily, then decreasing the doses the same way. This routine has been followed, carefully and faithfully, but no change is apparent. The veterinarian has told me there is nothing more to be done, but I cannot give up without some further effort. This puppy is the result of careful selective breeding. Not alone for conformation but for stamina. Have checked back several generations on both sire and dam and can find nothing similar to this affliction.—MRS. C. M. B., Edgewater, Colo.

ANSWER:—A possible explanation of the muscular twitch which you describe is that the dog has had virus distemper without any secondary complication such as those causing the familiar symptoms classed as distemper. The virus, however, affected the bone marrow producing a blood condition known as leucopenia. Under these circumstances it is possible for a streptococcus infection of the cord to develop. The natural resistance of the body prevented spreading of the disease and limited it to a small area which has resulted in the symptoms of which you complain. Your veterinarian has given the common orthodox treatment. It might also be explained by some injury to one of the neck vertebrae resulting in pressure on the cord. When the nervous symptoms are slight the dog often outgrows them. If the symptoms persist the dog cannot be shown successfully. But it can be used for breeding without reproducing any disability in the offspring regardless of its sex.

SPIKE TAIL—BOSTON TERRIER

QUESTION:—I would greatly appreciate the following information: Our Boston terrier seems to be the only one of a litter that did not have a screw tail. The party from whom I purchased him called his a spike tail. With this exception he is a very fine looking dog, well marked, and so forth. In breeding, will this necessarily make any difference in the puppies?—H. B., Charlotte, N. C.

ANSWER:—The show standard of the Boston terrier permits the tail to be straight although most fanciers of the breed prefer a screw tail. If this specimen is from genuine screw tail stock, a good proportion of the progeny will carry the desirable screw tail.

VOMITING AFTER MEALS. TICKS— WIRE FOX TERRIERS

QUESTION:—A puppy that I have vomits his food immediately after eating. Is there anything I can do about it? Also, what can I use to kill ticks on my wire fox terriers.—Mrs. C. E. I., St. Petersburg, Fla.

ANSWER:—The vomiting probably indicates gastric indigestion. Starve the dog for twelve hours. Then give a purgative dose of milk of magnesia. When this has acted put it on a diet of lean, raw beef cut into small cubes (not chopped), the meat may be fed plain or with a small amount of
