CONVINCING PROOF of the Superiority of SPRATT'S FOODS

Over three thousand (3,000) prizes awarded at since shows were won by dogs regularly and exclusively fed on

SPRATT'S DOG FOODS

For dainty feeders, toys, Pekingese, etc., we recommend

"Spratt's Mollicoddles" (MILK—WHEAT—MEAT)

These biscuits are particularly suited to the requirements of small breeds, partly on account of the ease with which they can be assimilated and digested, and partly because they contain only the most nourishing and invigorating ingredients in the most palatable form.

SPRATT'S BENCHING AND PENNING OUTFIT is fully equipped to take care of all shows—whether large or small. Secretaries are invited to write to us for prices.

THE AMERICAN KENNEL GAZETTE

PUBLISHED BY

THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB,

1 Liberty St., New York.

P. O. Box No. 2048.

Subscription two dollars per annum; Single copies twenty cents. For sale by Newsdealers.

Notices.

All checks, drafts, money-orders and express-orders should be made payable to the order of the American Kennel Club.

As we are charged exchange on all checks drawn on banks outside of New York City, persons sending money are requested to remit by draft on New York Postoffice, or express-orders, or by registered letter.

When postage stamps are sent in payment of fees, only those of the denomination of two cents will be accepted.

Secretaries of Clubs are requested to forward to the Secretary of the American Kennel Club notices of the election of officers and other club proceedings.

To prevent the duplication of names in the same breed, the Stud Book Committee reserves the right to register with a prefix, or number.

The Frontispiece

This is a pen drawing of the great Dachshund, Ch. Drickes. Mrs. A. Hungerford's Bay Shore Kennels are too well known to need any introduction. Every large show has an entry from this kennel, always in good condition, and well to the front in capturing the ribbons. Mrs. Hungerford attends the shows herself and takes personal interest in her dogs. It would be safer to say that there are very few better judges of the breed in the country. Besides champions and show dogs, there is nearly always a few good ones for sale at the Bay Shore Kennels. This typical breed has always been a favorite for house pets and at the same time has not by any means lost its sporting blood, as everyone knows who has owned them.

Kennel Names Dropped.

On the Fixture page of this issue will be found the kennel names dropped for non-payment of maintenance fees. We wish to warn the late owners of these names, that they cannot use them, as owner or breeder, and that the awards of all dogs so shown will be cancelled.

Gamin's Riquet

At the request of Mr. Grant Notman we publish the following information:

Ch. Gamin's Riquet was entered "for exhibition only" in the Westminster Kennel Club Show just held. He did not compete in either the regular classes or for specials.

REPORT OF THE STUD BOOK COMMITTEE

At a meeting of the Stud Book Committee, held March 9, 1914, the following ruling with regard to the registration of imported dogs registered in the English or Canadian Stud Books was approved: "No dog which is already registered in the English Kennel Club or Canadian Kennel Club Stud Book shall be registered in the American Kennel Club Stud Book under any other name than that under which it is already so registered; but this rule shall not prevent the addition of a prefix to the name under which it is registered."

WILLIAM L. BARCLAY, Chairman.

IN MEMORIAM

The Boston Terrier Club

In the passing away of Dr. F. H. Osgood, the Boston Terrier Club is called upon to mourn the loss of one who contributed very largely to its welfare, and we desire to express hearty testimony to the very great ability, enthusiastic devotion and valuable service that made him one of the most conspicuous figures in the kennel fancy.

Besides all his successes in every direction however, were those personal characteristics which everyone coming in contact with him appreciated and which will always attach to his memory the lasting sentiments of respect and esteem.

VOTED, That this testimonial be entered upon the records of the Boston Terrier Club, that a copy thereof be sent to the family of our deceased member, with the assurance of our deep sympathy in their and our loss, and that copies be sent to the Kennel Press.

W. G. KENDALL,
Committee.

Boston Terrier Club of New England

In the passing away of Dr. F. H. Osgood the kennel world, and the Boston Terrier fancy especially, suffer an irreparable loss.

It falls to the lot of few men to enjoy in this life a greater measure of respect and confidence than our friend secured from those around him, and now that he has gone he leaves behind the precious memory of an eminently strong, useful, and honored life.

In whatever he engaged he played well his part. Gentle but dignified in manner, sound in judgment, firm in opinions, he always advocated what he believed to be just and right without fear or favor to any.

To the Boston Terrier Club of New England the loss of such a member, with his immeasurable influence for the good of the fancy, leaves a void impossible to fill, and while we extend to his family our sympathy in their sorrow, we must also add our tribute of respect to their rich inheritance—his record.

Considering his invaluable services to all kenneldom and his many excellencies as a man, the Boston Terrier Club of New England desire to place on record its appreciation of his character.

For with the decease of Dr. F. H. Osgood there has been removed from our circle an active and devoted friend, whose labors in promoting the welfare and objects of this club ceased only with his life, and that while we mourn his loss, we honor his memory.

THEREFORE, Resolved:—

That this memorial be entered upon the records of the club and that a copy thereof be sent to the family of our friend, with the assurance of our warmest sympathy in their great affliction.

W. G. KENDALL,
J. R. BYRAM, JR.,
Committee.

THE ENGLISH KENNEL CLUB STUD BOOK

We have received with Secretary Jaquet's compliments, the Kennel Club Stud Book, Volume XLI, for the year 1913. In the summary of events two important changes are marked. On November 24th The Kennel Club removed from No. 2 Savile Row to their new premises at 84 Piccadilly. In December, the committee announced that the long series of Crystal Palace Shows held under the auspices of the Club had come to an end, that an agreement had been made with the proprietors of Olympia for a term of years, and that this year's show will be held at the well known building in Kensington.

ST. PAUL SHOW ADDS CLASSES

For Poodles (Other than Toy)

Through oversight, Poodles (other than Toy) were not given classes in the Premium List of the Northwestern Kennel Club's Second Annual Show, to be given at St. Paul, April 2, 3 and 4.

They are to be as follows:
Class 318a—Open dogs, $5.00, $3.00, ribbon.
Class 318b—Open bitches, $5.00, $3.00, ribbon.

A gold medal is offered for the best Poodle (other than Toy). Entries close with John F. Selb, Secretary, March 21st.

TOY SPANIEL CLUB OF AMERICA

The annual meeting of the Toy Spaniel Club of America was held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, on Thursday, February 26, 1914, at 2 p. m.

The election of officers and Executive Board for the year took place as follows:

President, Miss H. G. Parlett; First Vice-President, Mrs. George H. Pell; Second Vice-President, Mrs. James Doig; Third Vice-President, Mrs. A. L. Reynolds; Secretary, Mrs. H. S. Morris; Treasurer, Miss Mary Henderson.

Executive Committee: Mrs. George O. Kolb, Mrs. Wm. Sheppard, Mrs. Wm. S. Stahr, Mrs. Chas. M. Van Heuson and Miss Theodora Wilbour. Delegate to the American Kennel Club, Mr. Daniel P. Ritchey.

Three new challenge cups were presented to the club at this meeting. Mrs. James Doig offering one for Prince Charles, Mrs. Carl Baumann a challenge trophy for English Toy Spaniels, and Mrs. M. C. Cook a challenge cup for Blenheim. Another new cup recently presented to the club is the Forest and Stream challenge cup, to be competed for by Shetland Sheepdogs.

(Mrs.) H. S. MORRIS, Secretary.

FRENCH BULLDOG CLUB OF AMERICA

At the annual meeting of the French Bulldog Club of America, held March 7, 1914, the following named were elected members of the executive committee: Mr. Wm. Lennox, Dr. J. Lee Morrill, Mr. F. J. Bristol, Mr. John N. Champion, Mr. T. M. Turner, Mr. Grant Notman, Mr. John E. Haslam.

At a meeting of the executive committee, held immediately after the annual meeting, the following named officers were elected: Mr. Wm. Lennox, President, Mr. T. M. Turner, Vice-President, Mr. Grant Notman, Secretary and Mr. F. J. Bristol, Treasurer.

Mr. Grant Notman was elected delegate to the American Kennel Club.

THE TOY DOG CLUB OF NEW ENGLAND

Thanks are extended to the officers of the American Kennel Club and all others concerned for the courtesy and just consideration that has been shown the Toy Dog Club of New England for the 1 point rating given for their First Annual Show, held at New Bedford, Mass., May 31, 1913.

MARIANA P. BOWERS, President.

AS TO SABINES

Mr. Farwell writes:

I enclose copy for my usual ad. You will find some changes.

The old Ch. Sabine Ruler, at eleven years old, went the way of all good dogs the other day, leaving behind him the memory of a wonderful dog and a wonderful sire. Rarebit and Fernie will go down in history perhaps as the greatest brace of all time, and Ruler was their sire.

Featuring in our stud ad are several new dogs. There is Rocksand, the brother of Ringmaster (now in England), Round-up and Ratio, of the same breeding but a year later, the latter two being litter brothers to Sabine Rarewool, that we have sold in England. Rilteman is "Ch. Sabine Rifle, Jr.," but just a little better in one or two places than his daddy. Remember is the first of Ringmaster's get, a little dog with tremendous bone, good legs and feet, of whom we will later publish a picture.

The added feature, perhaps, is the change in our heading from "Smooth Fox Terriers," in vogue some thirteen years ago, to "Sabine Fox Terriers," the added feature being the wires. To Bandmaster is added one of the grandest little wires in America and the equal of any in coat. Sabine Bullion, a corking good wire and a credit to his sire, and who is possibly best described as "a wire Sabine Result." It is a stud dog if there ever was one.

We are giving this information to you now for the reason that the delay in getting pictures will prevent us from getting out the stud book until March, and I want to give the fanciers a chance to use the new dogs or the old ones.

We should like to have you call attention to the renewal of our special prizes for New York, 1915.

F. H. FARWELL.

PRACTICAL DOG-KEEPING

We have received from the publishers, the "Outing" Publishing Company, a copy of Mr. Williams Haynes book, entitled "Practical Dog-Keeping." It is dedicated to Mr. Theodore Offerman, "a gentleman, a sportsman, and a fancier." It is written for the beginner and the one-dog man, and will undoubtedly be found useful.

SPANISH STUD BOOK

We have received through the courtesy of El Conde de Lerida, a copy of Volume II (1913) of the Libros de Origenes L. O. E., the Stud Book of the Spanish Kennel Club. It contains numbers 107 to 221, and is illustrated with pictures of winning dogs.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MALTESE TERRIER CLUB

The Maltese Terrier Club of America held its annual meeting at the Gregorian Hotel, New York, February 23rd, and the following officers were unanimously elected to serve for 1914:

President, Dr. E. H. Berendsohn; Vice-President, Dr. Wm. Blackburne; Second Vice-President, Miss K. P. Newbold; Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. Carl Baumann. Delegate to A. K. C., Dr. E. H. Berendsohn.

MRS. CARL BAUMANN, Secretary.

GOLDEN GATE KENNEL CLUB

The Golden Gate Kennel Club of San Francisco desires to announce their fifth annual Bench Show, to be held April 28, 29, 30, 1914, at the Pavilion Rink in San Francisco. The judges for this occasion will be Mr. O. F. Vedder of New York City, Secretary of the French Bulldog Club of America and "the French Bulldog," and Mr. Andrew Albright, Jr., of New York City, all other breeds and unclassified specials.

BENJAMIN I. BLOCH, Superintendent.

THE TISSUE FOOD

By John A. McLaughlin, D. V. S.

The following is a continuation of the interesting article commenced in the February issue. It will be concluded in the April issue.

As I contend that all physiological phenomena must have an anatomical explanation, or a histological one, it is essential to my theory that this particular phenomenon must have an explanation in the histology of the capillaries, and I consider the assumption well founded that the capillaries are histologically, physiologically and regionally adapted to perform the work they do, and their function is the result of a special design on the part of the organism. Nor is this function a simple one, but holds a very important place in the physiology of the organism, for this act of passing through the capillaries is not merely one of passage, but also one of filtering, and the filtering is as important a physiological function as is the act of transportation. Transportation is essential, for if the tissue food should remain in the circulatory apparatus, it could not be of any benefit to the tissues, but filtering is also essential, to prevent substances that are inimical to the tissues coming in contact with them. To sum up the functions of the capillaries, they filter the good from the bad, permitting the good to pass through their walls, retaining the bad within their walls. Now we know what passes through, and we know just what remains in the capillaries; plasma passes through, corpuscles remain in the circulatory apparatus. I infer from this that plasma represents the good, and the corpuscles represent the bad; I infer also that the tissue food exists in the plasma, and not in the corpuscles.

With these remarks regarding the physiology of the capillaries, we can continue retracing the route of the tissue food with proper intelligence, for knowing that plasma and tissue food are found together, we can disregard the corpuscles, even though they dominate the blood so thoroughly, and follow the plasma, assured that where plasma is, there also is the tissue food.

The second step backward carries us to the lungs. You may ask, Why so far? To which question I must answer that the tissue food is a synthetic product, and only cells are capable of a synthetic power, and between the capillaries and the lungs there are no cells. These cells, however (or oxygen), I contended in my last paper, had no part in the up-build of the tissue food. I was very severely criticised for this statement, but my critic was alluding to plasma, which I believe does hold oxygen within its substance. This is where in my previous paper I made myself ambiguous, and used the term plasma and tissue food as meaning the same substance.

It might be well to explain here how oxygen becomes part of plasma. This is my explanation: The corpuscles carry oxygen into the capillaries, and the inference is that this oxygen is essential to the tissues, and enters the plasma in a pure state; but my explanation is that oxygen enters into the composition of the by-products and waste and not until these injurious substances are sufficiently oxidized are they permitted to pass through the walls of the capillaries, and form part of the tissue plasma, and then only because they are sufficiently prepared for elimination. Oxygen and its derivatives represent the impurities of plasma and the impurities of the blood.

From the lungs to the next place where a synthetic process is possible, we must leave the circulatory apparatus entirely. Before leaving, however, I might be asked if the blood has no effect on the tissue food? To which I answer: no; the tissue food once formed is altered only by the tissues themselves, but when the tissues partake of this prepared diet the tissues change it into tissue substance—tissue by-products and waste.

In the circulatory apparatus there is but one organ that has a direct influence on the tissue food, that is the heart, and the influence of this wonderful organ is confined to transporting it to the tissues. I argue that the tissue food is formed before it comes under this influence. The function of the heart is to produce the circulation. Without the heart the blood would remain motionless, and the tissue food would never reach the tissues; it is the dynamo, the power, within the route we are studying. Let us see what this power encompasses.

The heart exists for the benefit of the tissues—every organ for that matter exists for the same purpose; it produces the circulation, for otherwise the tissues would starve; the circulation transports the tissue food to the tissues—it is a case where the mountain is actually brought to Mahomet, and the heart is the power that moves the mountain; or, if you will, he is the shepherd of his flock of tissues, but instead of leading his flock to the pasture, he leads the pasture to his flock. The organism is capable of movement, and can search for its food, but not so with the tissues; they remain stationary. The relation between the organism and its world, and the relation between the tissues and their world (plasma) is reversed; in the former the organism moves; in the latter the world moves.

According to our text-books the function of the circulation is to carry, or rather force oxygen to the tissues. The explanation is, that the blood enters the lungs to absorb oxygen, and the heart propels this oxygen-charged blood to the tissues, where it is absorbed by the tissues. Instead of the blood absorbing oxygen from the atmospheric air, I infer that the lungs are anatomically and histologically designed to secrete oxygen and transport it to the blood vessels, which for this purpose constitute the ducts of the air cells.

It is a parallel function to the lacteals, which secrete tissue food from the food, and transport it to their blind cul-de-sacs, and that of the various glands (the mammary, for instance which secrete milk for instance from the plasma, and transport it to the lacteal ducts). I cannot understand the logic that gives such varied methods of procedure to organs whose difference is only in their structure, but whose purpose is the same; but I can understand the logic that infers that this difference in structure is to meet the difference in environment, nor can I understand the further argument that ascribes absorption to the intestinal lacteals, absorption in the lungs, absorption to the tissues, secretion to the mammary glands and excretion to the kidneys. It would not be a perfect man-made machine if built in such a manner.

Now we will study the route by which the tissue food enters the alimentary lymphatics and leaves the circulatory apparatus (or rather enters it, for we are retracing our course) and the structural arrangement of the parts which connect these two wonderful apparatus. The connection is made, as we know, by the thoracic duct, and the great lymphatic vein, and there can be no question that these two vessels make a remarkably simple and complete connection. To describe the route, however, from this point onward, or rather backward, I find very difficult; this is because the two ducts, or vessels, divide into three routes, each route following a different course. The one going to the alimentary canal is undoubtedly the one followed by the tissue food, and as it is our present purpose to study the backward route of the tissue food, this is the one we will follow. Having arrived at the alimentary canal, we will survey the route I have mapped out, and then study the structural arrangement of the two apparatus, and the histology and physiology of the lacteals and the mesenteric veins.

The route is as follows: Beginning in the lacteals, and passing to the receptaculum chyli, from the receptaculum chyli to the thoracic duct, from the thoracic duct to the circulatory apparatus, which it enters near the heart, the right heart, to be exact, from the right heart to the lungs, from the lungs to the left heart, from the left heart through all the arteries, but not into the veins, from the arteries into the arterial capillaries through the walls of the arterial capillaries (but not into the venous capillaries), to the intercellular spaces, from the intercellular spaces, into the open orifices of the lymphatic vessels.* Now I must pause here a moment to say that the systemic lymphatic vessels are but the continuation of those of the alimentary lymphatics; that although separated anatomically by the circulatory apparatus, they are nevertheless connected physiologically. As we have already noted, the blood has no effect on the tissue food, or upon the substances from which the tissue food is manufactured, so that when these latter substances pass with the tissue plasma into the intercellular spaces, and from these spaces into the systemic lymphatics, the physiological connection is complete. As we have also noted, the systemic lymphatics are divided into two branches, one carrying tissue plasma and tissue food and lymphatic corpuscles (which latter it collects during its progress to the great lymphatic vein) from the right moiety of the head and neck and right thorax to the great lymphatic vein. During its course it does not meet the alimentary lymphatics; but the other branch, which transports lymph from the rest of the system, meets the alimentary lymphatics at the receptaculum chyli, and its contents and that of the alimentary lymphatics pass through the thoracic duct as one fluid, and as such empties into the circulatory apparatus. The thoracic duct, however, anas-tamoses with the great lymphatic vein near their entrance into the veins, which anatomical fact impresses me that the resulting physiological fact of their entering the blood as one fluid is a normal act, and the fluids are not antagonistic to each other.

Now, to study the structural arrangement connecting the alimentary lymphatics and the alimentary canal. This connection is made, or so I deduce, by the lacteals, and by the lacteals alone. In attempting an anatomical explanation of the phenomena of food transportation from the alimentary canal, I wish it to reflect the fact, or what I believe is a fact, that there is no anatomical explanation for absorption by the mesenteric veins.

The great lymphatic system begins in the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal; the circulatory apparatus does not. The import of this fact is that they (the former) are connected, and the ending of one is the beginning of the other. I say "ending" advisedly, for the alimentary canal has two endings—one anatomical, the other physiological—the latter ending is the beginning of the great lymphatic system. As we have positive proof that the lacteals transport food from the alimentary canal, I assume there is an anatomical explanation for this physiological phenomenon, and the lacteals are constructed—must be constructed—to transport the food from the alimentary canal into their blind cul-de-sacs. The microscope informs us that the lacteals are supplied with cells, and I ascribe to these cells the power of performing this act. In other words, I contend that the power of transportation is inherent in the lacteals themselves, and not due to the absorption powers of their contents, as happens in the mesenteric veins. It must be remembered that the lacteals are empty when the alimentary canal is empty, there is nothing in their interior to absorb food, until the food first gets into them. How does the food get in them if not by the power of these cells? We have an explanation of absorption by the mesenteric veins, though I believe it is an erroneous one, for they are never empty, but to argue absorption for the latter (the mesenteric veins) is practically to deny it to the former (the lacteals).

I wish to advance the theory that the great lymphatic system is a gland; that it begins in the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal, and ends in the circulatory apparatus; that its purpose it to manufacture tissue food. It will be seen by this that I consider the anatomical, histological, and physiological connection between these two apparatuses made by the lacteal cells. This connection is analogous, if not identical, with the connection between the glands and the circulatory apparatus, while the activities of one are directed toward the food, the activities of the glands are directed toward the blood, or rather plasma, each lacteal cell producing tissue food and transporting it to its blind cul-de-sac, while the glandular cell produces its particular secretion (or excretion) and transports it to its blind tubule; the blind cul-de-sacs of the lacteals eventually form the thoracic duct, while the blind tubules of the various glands eventually form their ducts. The peculiar construction of the great lymphatic gland can be easily understood from the fact that it must collect the material from the extreme length of the alimentary canal, and distribute it to all parts of the system. This brings us to a consideration of the anatomical difference between the beginning of this gland and its ending in the circulatory apparatus. In the mucous membrane of the cul-de-sacs are closed; they end, or rather begin blindly, while the thoracic duct is open. This plan is similar to that of the glands possessing ducts; the ducts of the mammary glands, of the pancreas and kidneys, are closed in their beginnings and open at their endings; it would seem that all gland cells have the power of transporting their secretions (or excretions) into blind tubules, and I attribute the same power to the lacteal cells; and as the bladder is the emptying place of the kidneys, the outer world of the mammary (into another organism, would be more accurate), the small intestine that of the bile and pancreatic juice, so the circulatory apparatus is the emptying place of the alimentary lymphatics, and as I have explained the emptying place of the systemic lymphatics, which are but branches of the great lymphatic gland. As the bladder empties its contents eventually in the outer world, and the same is true of the bile and pancreatic juice, and milk finds its ultimate destination, as I have noted, in the infant's mouth, so the contents of the lymphatic gland which finds its course ending in the circulatory apparatus, eventually ends in the outer world by means of the eliminative glands. The inference of our text-books, that the blood is a pure fluid when first formed, and the only physiological impurity that ever exists in it is tissue-waste, I consider an error, as it is my belief that the blood contains many substances that are very injurious.

If we study the structure of the great lymphatic gland we find the minor lymphatic glands are situated along the course of the vessels, and can only receive what passes through the lacteals; should the lacteals secrete tissue food alone, and pass nothing into their ducts (lymphatic vessels) these succeeding glands would have no material from which to produce tissue food; therefore they transport more than they secrete. It gives us a key to their function, for as it is well known they absorb (using that objectionable term) many injurious substances, even poisons; it is not their function to select, or choose, but to transport all liquid substances from the alimentary canal to the veins, whether these substances are of benefit or an injury; in no sense are the lymphatic glands protective; the system must depend on the selective powers of the organism before these substances reach the alimentary canal, or on the eliminative organs after they do reach that apparatus. It will readily be seen from this explanation that the blood is not a pure fluid by any means, but on the contrary a very impure one; as a matter of fact, it must be loaded with impurities, especially after feeding. I believe this is the explanation of glycogen in the liver, that it but represents a stage in the transformation of some of the by-products of the lymphatics, on their career of elimination. The experiment proving that there is more sugar in the vein which leaves the liver than in the portal vein, which carries blood to that gland, fails to prove its purpose (the purpose of the experiment).

Having studied the arrangement whereby the great lymphatic system and the alimentary canal are connected, let us now pass into the alimentary canal itself. There is no question that in this apparatus the food is prepared for further "elaboration." I am emphasizing this word elaboration, for it means so much in physiology and yet so little; it is always leading us towards something—something that is understood to be of the greatest importance—but to the great discouragement of the student never reaches anywhere. In attempting to solve the problem that confronted me I have given elaboration a definite purpose and a definite object. Rightly or wrongly, I have determined that the aim and end of elaboration is the tissue food. Any analysis or criticism of my paper should begin at my viewpoint. The question to be answered first, is, "Is my viewpoint admissible—can structural anatomy be interpreted in the light of physiology, and vice versa, and is it a correct inference that when the food arrives at the tissues elaboration ends?" If not, most that I have said is error, but if admissible, the greater part of the analyses and criticism directed in opposition to my views have been misdirected.

As so much depends on my viewpoint, I would like to discuss it for a moment. It may be divided into two parts: (1) that structural anatomy can be interpreted by the physiological phenomena occurring in the parts to be interpreted; (2) that the particular purpose of the organism is to produce tissue food. If the first part was applied to a man-made machine, it would be synonymous to saying that as a machine is built, so it must work, and as it works so it must be built.

Reciprocity Agreement

Between The Kennel Club as representing The Kennel Club and the Clubs affiliated with it, and The American Kennel Club as representing the United States of America and its possessions.

The following agreement between The Kennel Club, London, England, and The American Kennel Club, New York City, New York, has been duly approved and ratified, this 12th day of March, 1914

I. A mutual exchange and recognition of "Black Lists" as they now exist, and any addition or alteration thereto to be at once mutually communicated. [A "Black List" to mean the official communication received by one Club from the other containing the names and addresses of persons who have been either suspended or disqualified under the Rules of "The Kennel Club," or who are not in good standing under the Rules of "The American Kennel Club."]

II. That any desired information of a confidential nature pertaining to the standing or reputation of any person engaged in judging, breeding, or showing dogs, shall be freely exchanged upon request of either Club through the official channel of its Secretary.

III. In order to prevent the granting of Kennel Names, prefixes and affixes, that may be identical with names granted or pending with The Kennel Club, The American Kennel Club agrees that it will not grant any application for a Kennel Name, prefix or affix, that may have been published in each month's issue of "The Kennel Gazette" (English) under the heading "Applications for Prefixes," until after the receipt of the latest number of said Kennel Gazette.

The American Kennel Club further agrees that it will not pass upon or grant any application pending with it before the twentieth day of each month.

IV. That every registered dog imported from the one Country to the other must be re-registered in its adopted Country in its own name, and in every particular as registered in the Country of its birth, and that if its own name be already registered in the Country of its adoption by a dog of the same breed, it must still be re-registered in its own name, to be followed by the abbreviation "Eng." or "Am." as the case may be, and that no dog imported from either England or America that has been registered in accordance with this rule can be renamed.

V. That as The American Kennel Club only permits American-bred dogs to compete in its Novice Class, The Kennel Club agrees to frame a regulation prohibiting dogs to compete in any of its Novice or Maiden Classes that have acquired the title of Champion under American Kennel Club Rules.
